(for example only to ip's in my own range, so that the server cannot be accessed from outside) Is there something like a firewall for the webserver? A: Not in a technical sense but in the meaning that it can't be accessed by outside users. You can use IP filters and IP proxying for this. In this scenario your NATing/firewall should be a secondary concern and only act as a "hashing" function. Ideally you'll have a private network, where one of the computers will run some kind of filter service, and connect to this service using localhost/127.0.0.1. See: IP filtering tutorial IP proxying tutorial 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of optimizing a purge strategy for use with a capacitively-coupled plasma reactor (CCPR). In particular, the present invention is directed to a method of optimizing purge gas flow rate, purge gas gas flow and purge gas energy to prevent degradation of the processing chamber (CCPR) surfaces. 2. Background of the Invention Plasma etching or plasma cleaning processes are well known in the art for etching materials formed on a substrate, removing contaminants from the substrate and cleaning the substrate. In general, a plasma etching process or plasma cleaning process requires a processing chamber, a gas supply system and an energy source, such as RF, microwave or DC power, to create a plasma and, then, an etchant gas or cleaning chemical. Plasma etching is commonly used to remove portions of a substrate which are not desired or to remove contaminates from the substrate. One type of plasma reactor used in
